What Members of Federally-Recognized Tribes Should Know About New York's Marketplace:

1 Sign up anytime

You can sign up for a health plan at any time during the year. You don't need to wait for an open enrollment period.

2 Help with monthly insurance costs

By using the Marketplace, many American Indians and Alaska Natives will have help paying for a health plan. The price you pay each month will depend on the plan you pick. Most people are eligible for tax credits that lower your monthly cost. Tax credits are calculated based on your income, household size, and where you live.

3 Support paying for extra costs

It's not just the monthly insurance cost that's a burden. It's extras like co-pays – the part of a medical bill that's charged to you, not your insurance company – and deductibles, the amount you must pay before your insurance kicks in. If your income is at or below $43,740 as an individual or $90,000 as a family of four, you may also be eligible to get help paying for these costs.

Also, no matter how much you make, if you get your health care services from the Indian Health Service, an Indian tribe, tribal organization, or urban Indian organization, or a contracted health services provider you will not have to pay anything when you receive these services.

4 Healthy or sick, the cost is the same

You can't be denied coverage or charged more just because you're already sick.

5 Ten important health services are covered

Every health plan offered at NY State of Health, no matter what it costs, must cover ten key health services. These include emergency services, care at a doctor's office, prescription drugs, even prevention and wellness services.
