Family Health Insurance Coverage is Getting More Affordable

New Eligibility Rule for Financial Assistance through NY State of Health

- As of January 1, 2023, eligibility for financial assistance for family members is based on affordability of family coverage offered by an employer.
- In 2024, a family health plan is considered “affordable” if the premium is less than 8.39 percent of the household income.
- If family coverage is considered unaffordable, family members may qualify for financial assistance.
- This does not change the affordability test for employees. If the employee can get affordable single (employee-only) coverage through their employer, they will not qualify for financial assistance through NY State of Health. However, family members may still be eligible.

The Financial Assistance Eligibility Rule Before 2023

- Until 2023, health insurance was considered “affordable” based on the cost of single (employee-only) coverage.
- Until then, if the premium for single (employee-only) coverage was less than 9.61 percent of the employee’s household income, it was considered affordable. Employees who could get affordable health insurance from their employer did not qualify for financial help for a NY State of Health plan.
- If an employee did not qualify for financial help through NY State of Health based on this rule, the employee’s family members were also ineligible for financial help through NY State of Health. This applied even when the family health plan offered by an employer costs more than 9.61 percent of household income.
